THE CAR

The last of the air-cooled 911s, in its most open form.

The 993 is the generation in which the 911 was finally resolved. Introduced in 1994, it kept the air-cooled flat-six and the shape that had defined the car since 1963, while adopting a multi-link rear axle, a stiffer bodyshell and the softer, wider bodywork drawn by Tony Hatter. It remained in production until 1998, when water cooling arrived with the 996.

This car is a Carrera 2 Cabriolet from the 1997 model year: naturally aspirated, rear-wheel drive, six-speed manual, with the electrically operated fabric roof and the fully finished tonneau that Porsche developed specifically for the 993. Finished in silver metallic over black leather, it has a documented Swiss history and has been maintained by Porsche specialists and the Porsche network.

Silver metallic, black roof

The car presents as an honest, regularly used example in silver metallic with a black fabric roof. Panel fit and the 993's characteristic surfaces read cleanly in the photographs; the rear light bar, headlamp lenses and brightwork are clear and unclouded. Black side decals and the 17-inch Cup wheels are as fitted.

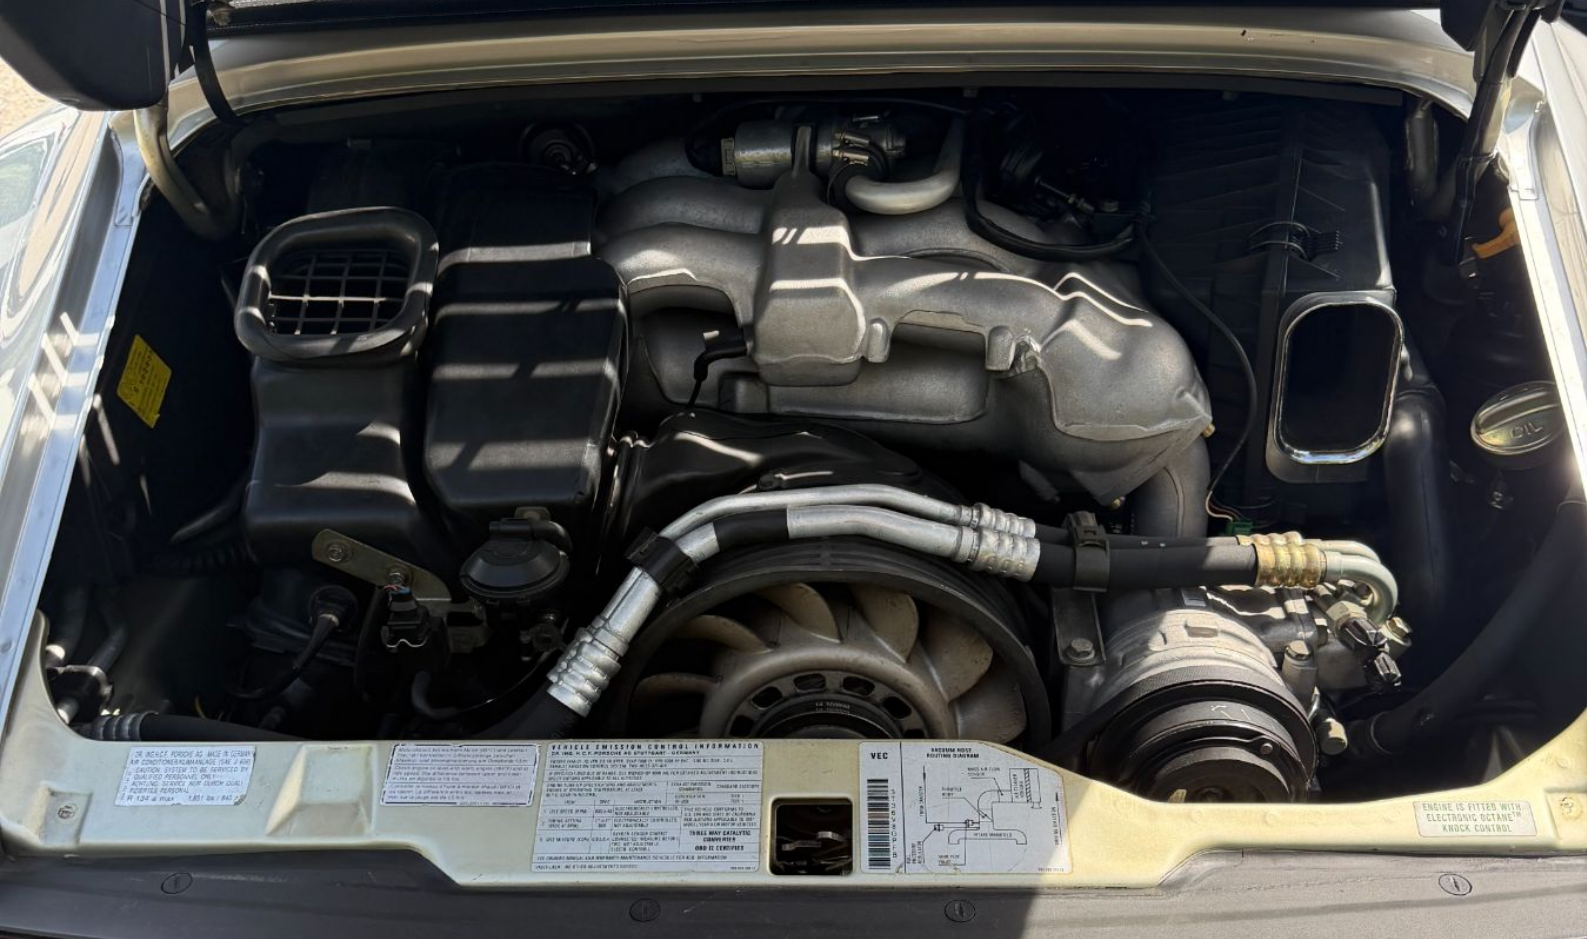

Paintwork and bodywork are open to inspection, and an independent pre-purchase inspection is welcome.

Black leather, five dials, a gear lever

Black leather throughout, with perforated seat centres, the four-spoke airbag steering wheel and the 993's five-dial binnacle. The cabin retains its original 993 architecture and switchgear, including the air conditioning controls and centre console.

Two later additions: a Porsche Classic head unit in the original aperture, and a USB / auxiliary interface mounted below the console. The handbrake lever grip shows age and surface cracking — photographed and listed on page 08 rather than described away.

08 — WHY THIS 993

A late air-cooled 911 combining the naturally aspirated 3.6-litre flat-six with rear-wheel drive and a six-speed manual gearbox. In Cabriolet form, the 993 retains its classic proportions while allowing the air-cooled engine to become an even greater part of the experience. Documented, regularly used, and offered with its stamped service book, manuals and supporting invoices.
